Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Southern Medicine and Surgery One could not initiate a discussion of this subject more aptly than to emphasize the statement of Snyder, which says: What makes the introduction of anesthetic agents in the course of labor an obstetric problem of first magnitude is that the influence of these substances upon the outcome of labor is so great that the risk involved for mother and child may be out of all proportion to the gain in pain relief. Presently, we should recall that 80 per cent of all live births occur in hospitals. United States Census Bureau figures indicate that in large urban areas as high as 94 per cent of live births occur in hospitals, about 60 per cent in rural areas. The increasing number of hospital deliveries is an index of the extent that analgesics and anesthetics are freely employed. We cannot lose sight of the fact that analgesic and anesthetic agents, those which are capable of obtunding pain and producing narcosis, are some of the most potent and lethal agents known in pharmacology. There is a definite dual consideration, mother and fetus, and we must consider the two inseparably. Previously, the fetus, with respect to the management of labor, was thought of more or less morphologically, rather than physiologically. In other words, various anatomical and developmental entities capable of producing dystocia, were the primary considerations. It is vitally important that the role of analgesics and anesthetics be thoroughly explored and that the genesis or origin of certain intranatal injuries may be linked to these agents. In brief, we must determine to the best of our ability the following facts: 1. What is...
