Not illustrated. 1884 Excerpt: . place of refuge for those who seek and require privacy in their sickness, we cannot but feel the impropriety of promiscuous visitation by persons many of them of immature years, who have no worthier motive in their coming than the gratification of idle and morbid curiosity. Evidence is often afforded that many come to us with cards of admission not in pursuance of any intelligent interest in the conduct of a great public charity, but rather in order to witness, if perchance Senate, No. 29. 8 they may, those who, as the symptomatic expression of their unfortunate malady, Cut strange antics before high heaven. That such intrusion upon privicy is scarcely justifiable I need not suggest. Indeed, when asked to take the argument home to themselves, some strangers of this class have frankly avowed to me that they, under similar conditions of disease, would prefer to be spared the exhibition by others of such vulgar curiosity. The questions often asked are not with reference to the great problems incident to the care of the insane, but. rather as to the place where the worst ones are kept, coupled with an expressed desire to see them. On the other hand many have visited us in an entirely different spirit and it has been a pleasure to answer their intelligent questions in conducting them through the wards. In the tables will be found a list by months of the number of visitors, in all 9, Hfl persons. Requirements....
