The Greek, Maltese, and St. Andrew's crosses are examples of what are called square figures, as being generally square, their four sides being alike. This figure may be given to pupils to study and draw by themselves if they have had the primary training. This will lead to independent work. If they have not had previous training, the suggestions below will be of use. To be developed.--Cross, Greek, Latin; general shape, square, oblong; drawing the cross; quality of line. Study of the Paper Cross.--What is the model? The model is a cross.) Can you draw at the board a different cross, and tell how it differs? (The first is alike on all four sides; the second is like the first...
