Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.David MacPherson has just lost both his parents in a tragic accident, and has to accompany their coffins all the way from Victorian London to an isolated estate in the Scottish Highlands, where they are to be buried, and where he is to live with his Auntie Mary and her two children, Paul and Sarah. After lunch, David decided to take some flowers to place on his parents graves. As he came to the tiny track that led from the road down to the shore of the loch, he had a clear view of the burial plots. He could hardly believe his eyes. A stag, a pure white stag with magnificent antlers was standing in front of his father s grave, pawing at the newly filled-in soil with one of its front hooves. What was it trying to do? To dig up his father s grave? Why? Surely deer were herbivores, weren t they? Hey! he cried. The stag looked up at him. Even at that distance, David knew that it was the creature that had been spying on him from the undergrowth during the burial service. Although wild deer tend to shy away from humans, this particular stag stood its ground; even turning its attention back to the grave, its hoof still pressed on the freshly laid turf. David picked up a stone and started to descend towards the shore line. He checked the grave for any signs of damage. All he could see was the unmistakeable imprint of the animal s cloven hoof set in the lower right hand corner of the grave. Little does David realize that his life is to be bound up with...
